During his visit to Lajes Wednesday, Gen. John Sheehan, Commander in Chief, U.S. Atlantic Command, took some time to speak with members of Team Lajes as well as deployed members of the 366th Air Expeditionary Wing from Mountain Home AFB, Idaho. Sheehan said en route support bases like Lajes are vital to the preparedness of U.S. armed forces.

Gen. Sheehan returns to Lajes

Gen. John Sheehan, commander in chief of the U.S. Atlantic Command, stopped by Lajes Tuesday afternoon for what he called an update visit to "an important en route facility."

While here the general visited several military sights on and outside the base fences to keep up to date on issues currently being worked between American and Portuguese officials.

"I always try to get out every four to six months to come visit Lajes and today I received some updates on force protection issues, civil engineer issues and I got a chance to see the support units associated with the B-1s which are taking part in Northern Viking '97," he said. "From my perspective, and a global perspective, Lajes is one of those places that is very, very important and what the people do here is very important."

Sheehan, who will retire later this year, said joint operations are here to stay and are important to U.S. warfighting capability. "(Joint operations) have everything to do with what is going to happen with the budget," he said. "Efficiency doesn't just happen from Washington, it happens at the tactical and operational level and if the services can learn the battle rhythms of the other branches, they become more efficient. Joint operations is the way to go."

The general said Lajes is a place that fits into the 'new world order' especially since much en route support structure has been lost through force reductions. "Lajes is one of those places that has been used for every contingency we've ever been involved in since I've been on active-duty. It's a base that is absolutely essential for tanker support, fighter en route and now, as you can see, bomber forces. It will always be a very important requirement."

Widnall looks at Air Force challenges

Commentary by Sheila Widnall
Secretary of the Air Force

WASHINGTON (AFNS) — Last week was one of the most challenging in recent Air Force history. In the midst of global deployments and continuing challenges as we downsize the force, you may perceive the sudden retirement of Chief of Staff Gen. Ronald Fogleman and decisions by Secretary of Defense William Cohen with regards to last year's Khobar Towers bombing as setbacks for the Air Force. I'm sure many of you feel anxious or concerned for the future. I understand your concerns and want to share my insights with you.

General Fogleman has done a masterful job preparing the Air Force for the challenges we'll face over the next three decades. He has accomplished the agenda he set out for himself as chief. Last week, I nominated Gen. Michael Ryan to succeed General Fogleman, and the president accepted the nomination. General Ryan has a superb record in the most demanding Air Force and joint positions, and I know he will provide outstanding leadership as we move into the 21st century. You should expect no changes in direction, commitment to readiness, quality of life or modernization.

The Air Force is still very much intact and pressing on with its vital missions. While we are busier than ever before, it is for good and important reasons. Fact is, many nations and millions of people around the globe are depending on us. Today, our missions are more complex than those of the Cold War but just as vital to world peace. This is a time of great opportunity for our nation. As military professionals, our stock in trade is very much in demand, and this is something of which we can be very proud.

Dramatic changes and challenges are nothing new to our profession. Think back to your history lessons, to the stories of B-17 crews being shot out of the skies over Europe during World War II. Airmen went on to help win the war, but in the process the price paid was enormous. Our challenges today are nowhere near the challenges of that period, but they point out a fact that cannot be disputed: The people of the U.S. Air Force will weather any storm.

In addition, the lessons learned from the Khobar Towers will not be lost. In fact, we have already acted on these lessons and continue to place the highest priority on force protection. I'm confident our troops deployed around the globe operate in the most secure environment we can provide.

As we emerge from these difficult times, I'm sure we will be a better Air Force. Our opportunity to show the world what we're made of has everything to do with your actions in the field. Your professional demeanor in the execution of the Air Force's mission will be the true measure of Air Force resilience, not the decisions or actions in Washington.

I know I can count on you and, to be very clear, I have come to expect nothing less. So as we deal with our recent challenges, we must continue to carry out the business of the Air Force in the outstanding manner that has become our hallmark. Every one of us is responsible for a portion of our mission, and the nation expects all of us to do our duty in our standard excellent manner. For my part, I pledge my efforts will always have your best interests at heart and I will do everything I can to maintain our standing as the world's most powerful air and space force.

A concerted team effort went into making the Team Lajes quilt patch. The patch will be used as one piece in a larger quilt representing Air Force Heritage.

Lajes takes part in 50th anniversary quilt

As part of the Air Force Services Agency's plan to create an Air Force Heritage Quilt, members of Team Lajes got together to produce a 14x14 inch square representing the base.

According to Col. C. Barry Long, director of programs for the agency, the quilt will represent the pride and spirit of Air Force people, the teamwork inherent in the mission and all major commands and bases past and present. "After being presented to the secretary of the Air Force and the chief of staff in December, it will be displayed at various bases and ultimately put on display in the Air Force Museum," Long said.

The Lajes quilt square was created by a team of crafters to include Joyce Murra, Vivian Childs, Maria Ruff, Kim Skates, Kathy Peters, Melody Calvert, Julie Shaffer and Alice Gibson.

The patch illustrates the island of Terceira along with the coats of North America and Europe, aircraft and cows.

Above the island are the words 'Crossroads of the Atlantic' and below are '65th Air Base Wing.'

Pass and ID sets out registration rules

SrA. Susan Pelletier
Pass and registration

The 65th Security Forces Squadron, Pass & Registration section, continually strives to keep the Lajes community informed of any new developments concerning the vehicle registration process. It is our goal to provide the community the best possible and most accurate information as it becomes available.

The current vehicle registration process is as follows:

- Members are notified by the 1324th Medium Port Command, when their vehicle arrives on Terceira.

- Members then schedule an appointment with MPC to pick up their vehicle. Members are required to bring proof of ownership (title, etc.), valid insurance, ID card and their USFORAZORES driver's license to this appointment. MPC will issue a three duty day bilingual pass which will allow the owner to drive on their state side plates. Vehicles using this pass can only use the main base gate.

- During this three day period the owner must schedule an appointment with the pass and registration section. Members are required to bring all of the above paperwork with them to include their bilingual pass. The vehicle ID number is then verified and members are issued SPF Form 2, vehicle registration which includes the license plate number, and DEROS decals for the rear plate.

- Members then proceed to the AAFES service station to purchase their license plates which should be put on the vehicle immediately.

- Members have 45 days to get vehicles inspected after all the above requirements have been met.

Vehicle Inspection Information

- The wait at the vehicle inspection center, is about two to three weeks so people should plan their inspections accordingly. Waiting until the last day will cause aggravations and could ultimately cost more money.

- If a vehicle is less than 4 years old and it was inspected under the previous inspection process, members are only required to come in and receive DEROS decals.

- Members who had their vehicle inspected under the new inspection process and their decals do not reflect their DEROS date need pick up the proper date decals. Those who fall under the previous inspection process and need to get their vehicle inspected this year are required to pick up their new DEROS decals after the vehicle has been inspected.

- After a vehicle passes inspection the VIC will issue a small white decal which must be placed in the passenger side top corner of the windshield. This is the actual inspection decal. The vehicle must also have the insurance card in the passenger side lower corner of the windshield. These are required by Portuguese law to be permanently displayed.

Pass and registration hours of operation

- Monday through Friday from 8 to 11 a.m. and noon to 5 p.m. Appointments are required for initial registrations, ID card and ration card issues. For more information, call the 65th Security Forces Squadron, Pass and Registration section at Ext. 23611.

Changing stations in rest rooms

We recently arrived and I would like to know why there are no baby changing stations at any of the facilities in any of the bathrooms here on base.

I've talked to other mothers and everyone has the same question. I would appreciate it if someone could take the time to let me know what the problem is and why we can't get one of those stations that mounts on the wall and folds up. It's very inconvenient having to change your baby on the floor.

With the number of little ones at Lajes, I find that to be a good question. After inquiring with the services director I was happy to hear that the changing tables, like the ones you described, are planned for several community facilities including the fitness and community centers. Thanks for your interest and I hope this answers your question.

More recycling?

I've noticed there is a recycling center outside the main gate and I'm wondering why we can't have a plastic and cardboard recycling center on base.

Thanks for your interest in recycling here at Lajes. I would like to thank our folks who work so hard to make recycling program possible by serving on the detail to collect recyclables on Fridays. Plastic and glass are not recycled on base because of an unstable market for these materials and the high transportation costs involved. It's true the Portuguese collect them but those efforts are heavily subsidized by the Portuguese government. Unfortunately, we don't have the money to do the same. Currently, we recycle aluminum cans, paper and cardboard and collection bins for these can be found in most office and industrial areas. There are also two trailers in the commissary parking lot for recyclables. People with large amounts of cardboard from a move can call the carrier to have it picked up and those with large amounts of cardboard from office areas can call Ext. 24170. For more information, call Capt. Carolyn Langley at Ext. 23570.

Pedestrians, joggers beware of road hazards

Joe Raposo
Ground safety manager

Recently, I wrote an article on jogging that raised some important issues. Many readers, asked: "What rights do joggers have on public traffic routes on-base?"

Regrettably, in accordance with the Portuguese Road Code, joggers and runners have little or no rights-of-way on base or island roads. Let me clarify.

Under the Traffic Road Code, pedestrians have one conditional right but many obligations. Pedestrians are only allowed to walk on sidewalks, paths and passageways, and in their absence, on berms. Pedestrians, however, have the right to transit on public traffic roads when sidewalks, paths and passageways are unavailable. However, they are obligated to use extreme prudence when jogging and must do so in such a manner as to not to disturb the flow of traffic. In other words, joggers and pedestrians must yield right of way to automobiles. Other pedestrian requirements include the following: Whenever jogging between sunset and sunrise, members should wear reflective vests. Whenever jogging in a group, participants should do so in single file, and, if done at night, a white light must be at the front of the formation with a red light at the rear.

Pedestrians are only allowed to cross at crosswalks. In the absence of these, they have the right, not to be confused with the right-of-way, to cross when there is no oncoming traffic, and that the crossing can be accomplished safely. Furthermore, the traffic code calls for pedestrians to be as quick as possible when crossing and that pedestrians cross at a 90 degree angle, thus never diagonally.

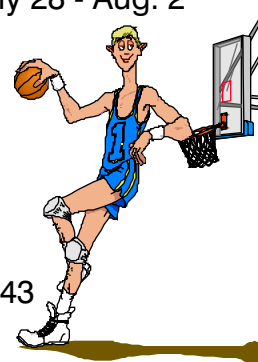

It is important to remember the only so-called right a pedestrian has is when he or she is crossing the street at a crosswalk, and only when they have initiated the crossing. Also, when a pedestrian does not use a crosswalk because one does not exist or it is impractical, the pedestrian must not disturb the flow of traffic when crossing the street. Moreover, it is during the crossing that the Road Code calls for motor vehicle operators to yield the right-of-way to pedestrians. And only then.

Lest we forget, pedestrians are at the mercy of the traffic and not the other way around. The responsibility for any traffic mishap is of the person who caused it, whether he or she is on foot or behind a steering wheel.

LOWERING THE BOOM

Two KC-135Rs with flight crews and maintenance members from the 22nd Air Refueling Squadron deployed with the 34th Bomb Squadron in support of Northern Viking 97.

The refuelers have visited Lajes in the past, but this is the first time aircraft from the unit have deployed and operated out of Lajes Field.

The 22nd ARS is from Mountain Home Air Force Base, Idaho as part of the 366th Air Expeditionary Wing. One of the aircrew members, Capt. John Kara, explained the unique mission of the 22nd. Our mission is "to provide robust airlift and air refueling capabilities to the Gunfighters any time any where," he said referring to the name the wing uses for themselves as a team.

Kara further explained the 22nd is the only refueling squadron under Air Combat Command which means they are fully engaged supporting the 366th. "Being part of the Air Expeditionary Wing allows us to support not only the 34th Bomb Squadron, but other 366th Wing units such as F-15C, F-15E, and F-16C fighter squadrons on a continual basis anywhere in the world as the mission dictates. We generally train and try to deploy as a package with these squadrons," he said.

Though not as much in the spotlight as their more glamorous teammates the B-1s, the mission of the 22nd is essential. "We plan the refueling operations and inform the supported aircraft where and when refueling will occur," said Kara. "We call this our air refueling control time or ARCT. If we can't make that air refueling control time happen, that Gunfighter will have to cut short its mission and return to base."

To make the air refueling operations happen, the air crew of a KC-135R consists of a pilot, copilot, navigator and boom operator Kara said. "The boom operator is the only enlisted member of the air crew, but they are in charge when air refueling is being conducted."

The reason for this uncommon occurrence is because of safety. Located in the rear of the KC-135R, the boom operator has full view of the operation and controls the boom for the transfer of fuel to the support aircraft. Refueling operations may take from three to 15 minutes per aircraft depending on fuel requirements. "It's not just simple refueling," said Kara. "It requires solid training in order for both air crews and the boom operator to work in harmony together."

To keep these aircraft flying, it also requires a solid maintenance team. "For this mission at Lajes we brought a team of 15 maintenance people," said 2nd Lt. Michael Lock, squadron maintenance officer. The team consists of a maintenance officer, a production supervisor, crew chiefs, life support, supply, and specialties personnel.

Lock explained that keeping these aircraft fully operational is not only important for the refueling mission, but the refuelers also provide transportation for the majority of the men and women from the 34th Bomb Squadron as well as additional cargo to include a replacement wind screen for one of the B-1's.

"The KC-135R has been in the Air Force inventory for many years," said MSgt. Bill Johnson, production supervisor. "To keep our aircraft fully maintained, our maintenance crew average three hours of preflight and four hours post-flight maintenance."

One of Johnson's crew chiefs, TSgt. Tony Curtis, explained the KC-135R will have its organic maintenance support when it deploys from home base. "Support traveling with the tankers can range from the crew chiefs to a complete maintenance package depending on the deployment," he said.

For the 22nd, the job is more than just lowering the boom and they all agree it takes teamwork to accomplish the mission in support of the war fighters.

Fogleman sends message to AF

Gen. Ronald R. Fogleman
Air Force Chief of Staff

Dear Men and Women of the United States Air Force,

As my tenure as your Chief of Staff ends, I want to tell you what an honor and a privilege it has been to represent everyone in the United States Air Force.

The timing of my announcement was driven by a desire to defuse the perceived confrontation between myself and the Secretary of Defense over his impending decision on the Khobar Tower terrorist attack. The decision to retire was made after considerable deliberation over the past several weeks.

On one level, I've always said that my serving as the Chief of Staff was a "tour"- not a "sentence" and that I would leave when I made all the contributions that I could. After I accepted this position in 1994, I met with other senior leaders of the Air Force to discuss our goals for my tenure. We wanted to take care of the troops and their families, to stabilize the force, to set a course for modernization and to develop a new strategic vision. During some difficult and challenging times we have worked hard to accomplish that and more. Certainly there is more to be done but the framework of the plan and the leadership is in place to move forward with the support and efforts of the magnificent men and women of our Air Force.

On another level, military service is the only life I have ever known. My stock in trade after 34 years of service is my military judgment and advice. After serving as Chief of Staff for almost three years, my values and sense of loyalty to our soldiers, sailors, Marines, and especially our airmen, led me to the conclusion that I may be out of step with the times and some of the thinking of the establishment. This puts me in an awkward position. If I were to continue to serve as Chief of Staff of the Air Force and speak out, I could be seen as a divisive force and not a team player. I do not want the Air Force to suffer for my judgment and convictions. In my view this would happen if I continue as your Chief. For these reasons I have decided to retire and devote more time to personal interests and my family ... but the Air Force will always be in my thoughts.

Miss Jane and I have met a lot of wonderful American service men and women- active duty, guard, reserve, civilians and family members and they will continue to be a part of our lives. We have been proud to represent the men and women of the United States Air Force around the globe and to serve in the finest Air Force in the world. God bless and keep you all as you continue to serve this great nation.

Air Force Worldview

"Air Force One" a hit

SSgt. Michael Dorsey
Air Force News Service

WASHINGTON — "Air Force One" was not only the No. 1 movie in the country July 26-27, but it scored high with the mostly Air Force audience during a special premier in Washington July 23.

The often realistic film features Harrison Ford as President Jim Marshall. A large helping of Air Force aircraft and extras add to the feature's authenticity.

Hollywood's 747 version of the original VC-25A aircraft was the battleground for Ford in the terrorist-oriented plot. Thus, the audience gets to see a mock 'Air Force One' interior, including the aerial "oval office," conference room, private bath, cargo area, cockpit and press area. On the exterior, a crew of 10 people split round-the-clock shifts over four days to paint Air Force One's clone.

Other Air Force assets were splashed on screen throughout the movie. From the outset, Air Force Special Operations Command representatives helped actors with tactics. A computer-generated refueling mission was carried out on screen using a KC-10 from Rickenbacker Air National Guard Base, Ohio, standing in as Ramstein Air Base, Germany.

"The Air Force worked very closely with the movie industry," said Chuck Davis of the Western Region Air Force Public Affairs Office in Los Angeles. "Many units contributed to help portray the Air Force professionally, realistically and accurately. It was an opportunity to show what the Air Force is all about."

Six F-15s from Eglin Air Force Base, Fla., an AFSOC MC-130E from Hurlburt Field, Fla., a C-5 from Travis AFB, Calif., and a C-141 from McGuire AFB, N.J., also appeared on screen.

Davis said more movies with Air Force support are scheduled to hit the silver screen in the near future.

"Tomorrow Never Dies," starring Pierce Brosnan, is expected to open around Christmas, "Home Alone 3" will show off Air Force recruiting, while "Armageddon," starring Bruce Willis, features explosive ordnance disposal tactics.

NCO makes Air Force softball team

Mike Freidman, known to many throughout Lajes simply as "Big Mike" took his bat and went calling on the coaches at the Air Force softball tryout camp July 24.

Along with 27 others, he began a week of 7-hour softball practices to include two hours of batting practice, two hours of fielding practice and several hours of scrimmages. By the end of July the roster had been cut twice - down to 15.

As much of an achievement as making the squad is, however, it isn't something new for the 629th Air Mobility Support Squadron NCO - this is his sixth time up at the Air Force level team.

According to SSgt. Mark Hamrick, 65th Services Division, Mike is currently playing first base on his scrimmage team and batting cleanup. In nine games he's hit an astonishing 16 homers and is batting .714.

The Air Force team travels to Little Creek Naval Air Station, Va., Saturday for their first tournament game.

Drive safely!

Race results

John Paul II Stadium was the playing ground for the 2nd annual BTT Azorean Championship Mountain Bike race. Of the 39 participants, 22 were from Terceira, 9 from Sao Miguel, 7 from Faial and one American.

Two base participants took honors in the veteran class (30+) Joao Valadao, a civilian with the base fire department came in 2nd; and SrA. Dean Gracey, 65th Operations Support Squadron, finished 3rd.

Half the racers didn't finish due to mechanical problems experienced on the 25 mile course.

People interested in riding, but not necessarily racing, should call Ext. 28755 and join others to discover the island through bike trail riding.

The island's 9th Annual Bicycle Road Race began yesterday and continues through Sunday. Cyclists will cover 400km around and through Terceira,
